

Lizette Escamilla, MPH

Lizette Escamilla is currently a Project Coordinator for Project ECHO, CHI St. Luke's Health. She received her Social Sciences Bachelor of Arts Degree from the University of Houston and her Masters of Public Health from Benedictine University, Lisle, IL. She has nearly twenty years of public healthcare and outreach experience, and has worked effectively to serve the medically underserved and uninsured communities. She has collaborated with CHI St. Luke's Health, Baylor College of Medicine, Texas Children's Hospital and MD Anderson Cancer Center physicians, as well as primary care providers, family and internal medicine residency programs, executives and social work agencies in and around Texas and Louisiana. She continues to bring awareness to the importance of the physical, emotional and mental health aspects of healthcare by working with federally qualified health centers, private medical offices and medical centers throughout U.S. cities and rural communities. She has experience in working with a diverse clientele and has lead several programs regarding preventative healthcare and treatment, with many keynote speakers including Houston City Council Members, Former Houston Mayor Bill White and U.S. Congressmen. She has co-written grants for cancer survivorship programs and continues to build effective patient programs so that they may have better access to treatment care. She holds several memberships including the American College of Healthcare Executives, the Breast Health Collaborative of Texas, Susan G. Komen for the Cure Education Committee, MD Anderson Cancer Center National Cancer Survivor Committee Member and the Texas Society of Public Health Educators.
